WELCOME TO THIS YEAR'S MAYWORKS FESTIVAL

MayWorks Festival of Labour and the Arts is a multi-disciplinary festival that focuses on working class themes. It is held in Winnipeg every year throughout the month of May to honour and promote the many positive contributions of unions and working people in general. The first MayWorks Festival was held as part of the celebrations organized to mark the 75th Anniversary of the Winnipeg General Strike in 1994.

Since then we have continued to hold the Festival in the month of May as part preserving and developing culture which speaks to the struggles waged to defend and extend the social, political and economic rights of all.

As the world continues to experience shockwaves from the deep economic crisis of capitalism many are looking for a way out. "Another World is Possible" is the theme of MayWorks 2013 in recognition of the growing awareness – from the Occupy Movement to Idle No More – that the current world order is unsustainable. In keeping with the striving for alternatives you will see a feature (beginning on page 6) on the co-operative movement written by Lynne Fernandez and Monica Adeler of the Canadian Centre of Policy Alternatives (Manitoba).

Finally, we note with sadness that MayWorks 2013 is dedicated to the memory of Errol Black who passed away in November 2012. Our theme "Another World is Possible" is certainly one that Errol subscribed to in all of his activity. Errol was well known in his academic and political life as an advocate for social justice, progressive and democratic causes and workers' rights (please see page 12 for more on the life of Errol Black).

Whatever your interest we invite you to come and participate in the events that are part this year's MayWorks Festival of Labour and the Arts. Enjoy this program book as part of that offering. And beyond the month of May we are looking to expand the presentation of events on a year round basis to present items of interest as the opportunities arise.

MAY DAY 2013

ANOTHER WORLD IS POSSIBLE

As we digest the news coming out of Europe, with millions of people out of work at the same time as austerity measures are shutting down the social programs they need more than ever, it is hard not to be worried about the future.

Closer to home, the economy remains sluggish and household debt is at an all-time high as workers struggle to stretch stagnant wages as much as possible. Locked as we are in the aftermath of a global recession we all feel powerless: how can we take control of our lives? How can we put a sense of purposefulness into our work? What happened to community and how can we get it back? Bad as the news is, we can take hope this May Day that another world is possible.

There are examples close to and far from home that demonstrate that workers can take control of their lives. Whether it be through large-scale cooperatives—some supported by the labour movement, or through one-off co-ops such as we see developing in Winnipeg, we need to take heart that we can take control in a meaningful way. The following three examples explain how.

Starting in the 1980s in Quebec, an energetic program of social mobilization supported by organized labour, the state and other social movements was able to build new legal, financing and technical assistance models for cooperative development. Part of the regeneration of the Quebec co-operative movement during the 1980s was due to the support of and ties with the labour movement, which was ready to partner with the co-operative sector, and the state. These organizational connections between the co-operative sector and the trade union movement have translated in more support for both movements with the creation of a venture capital fund. For instance, the Chantier de l'Economie Sociale Trust is a fund supported by Canada Economic Development, Fonds de solidarité (a labour-sponsored venture capital corporation), Fondation-Fonds de développement de la CSN pour la coopération et l'emploi (a labour-sponsored development fund), and the Government of Québec. This fund finances collectively-run businesses and social enterprises.

Today the cooperative sector in Quebec employs around 3500 workers. Worker co-operatives seek to provide stable employment, better wages and working conditions. A private enterprise, on the other hand, strives to buy labour at the cheapest possible price in order to keep costs down. In contrast, worker co-ops, with their one-member, one-vote model, are an example of economic democracy which allows for the ownership of the means of production by the workers. In this way, workers participate in the management and decision making of the enterprise.

As manufacturing in the United States continues to shrink, the United Steel Workers (USW) is exploring new strategies for saving jobs. They are considering using employee-run businesses to create new, middle-class jobs to replace union jobs gone overseas. For example, the USW is considering the replication of the Evergreen Cooperative model, which was started in Cleveland in response to the high unemployment left by the economic downturn. Foundation money, public funds, and private investment capital helped get the model going. The Evergreen Cooperative Initiative creates living-wage jobs in Cleveland's low-income neighbourhoods and has become known as the "Cleveland Model". The model is being considered in other American cities that have suffered manufacturing job losses. The Initiative considers strategies to confront several difficult economic problems such as:

- How to create decent jobs in an increasingly difficult economic environment with growing job dislocation
- How to anchor capital in low-income neighbourhoods
- How to implement green jobs
- How to rebuild inner-city economies.

Strategies aim to increase community asset ownership, create local jobs, strengthen the local tax base and overall, ensure local economic stability. This model already has support from various sectors, so if unions like the USW get involved, the potential for expansion will be even greater and may help revitalize the union sector.

These two examples suggest that there can be valuable connections between various sectors to keep jobs local, tie new businesses to existing city institutions and give workers a voice in decision-making and an ownership stake in the means of production. There are less-extensive, but equally important worker cooperatives right here in Winnipeg that are also making a difference.

Neechi Food Co-op Ltd. (325 Dufferin) is an Aboriginal worker-owned and run cooperative that has been operating in Winnipeg's North End for over 23 years. Neechi uses its worker/ownership structure to foster a strong sense of community identity and responsibility. Neechi Foods Co-op developed the new Neechi Commons Community Business Complex, located on Main Street, which houses a new expanded grocery including a cafeteria/restaurant, a bakery, fish market, specialty foods, Aboriginal books, arts and crafts, a farmers market and a hardware and dry goods section.

With Community economic development (CED) at the core of Neechi's operations, one of its mandates is to stay in the North End, an area that private enterprises have abandoned. Neechi Commons' goal is to have a noticeable positive impact on Main Street and the North End where many Aboriginal families reside. It plans on providing employment to local workers, with up to 30 new fulltime and 30 new part-time jobs being created. By selling locally harvested and produced foods such as wild rice and bannock, it will also promote regional economic development.

As in the previous examples, various institutions contributed capital financing to get this initiative off the ground. The Winnipeg Partnership Agreement, federal and provincial governments, and St. Mary's United Church contributed capital financing and both co-op members and non-members have purchased shares. The Assiniboine Credit Union, The Jubilee Fund, the Canadian Worker Co-operative Federation and Co-op members have also provided loans. The Assiniboine Credit Union, a cooperative in its own right, keeps its members money circulating in the local economy and plays a key role in supporting the cooperative network in Winnipeg.

There are other workers co-ops in Winnipeg, including Organic Planet Co-op, Mondragon Workers Co-op, Natural Cycle Courier and Northern Star Worker Co-op.

What better way to mark this International Workers' Day than to celebrate the resilience and resourcefulness of those workers who have taken control of their workplaces, lives and communities. In the face of so much bad news, they remind us that another world is possible.

Lynne Fernandez is the Errol Black Chair in Labour Issues at the CCPA MB. and Monica Adeler has a PhD. in the cooperatives movement.

He is the cultural leader for hundreds of thousands of folks, who upon hearing him, picked up guitars and banjos and began to change the sound of North America's music. His music is the sound track for the civil rights and anti-war movements, making his societal impact insurmountable. This night of music comes from all parts of Pete's repertoire. Traditional songs, political songs, and old fashioned mountain songs all packed into one evening featuring local talent Leonard Podolak, Red Moon Road, Nathan Rogers, Rob Varrmeyer and more.

A TRIBUTE TO ERROL BLACK

If we're very lucky, every once in a while someone special will come into our lives. Errol Black was special.

He would be the first to claim otherwise, and to insist that we are all special, he no more than others. That was Errol's way: down-to-earth, friendly with everyone, loyal to family, friends, and the progressive, people-based ideas that he fought for his entire life.

Errol died November 3, 2012. He had been suffering from Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis (ALS)—Lou Gehrig's disease.

Errol was a fixture in the east end of Brandon. He served for 12 years as a combative, informed and effective Brandon City Councillor for his East End ward. He worked consistently for, and sometimes was a candidate for, and frequently was a forceful and principled but supportive critic of, provincial NDP governments. For 30 years he was a Professor of Economics at Brandon University. His specialty was labour economics, and he published widely, including a book on trade unions in Canada that is used by unions and in university courses across the country.

For 30 years he was an active member of the Brandon Labour Council, and an active member of BUFA, the Brandon University Faculty Association. Mel Myers—long-time labour lawyer—considers Errol to have been one of Manitoba's most outstanding trade unionists.

Errol was a co-founder of the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives-Manitoba (CCPA-Mb), and stayed actively involved with CCPA-Mb to within a week of his death. He published voluminously with CCPA-Mb: on the threat to Canadian trade unionists from recent developments in the USA; on the railroading of the leaders of the 1919 Winnipeg General Strike; on the growing inequality between rich and poor and its many adverse impacts, and on and on.

Most striking to me about Errol is that he was able to combine his warm, loving personal qualities, with his determined and always principled and energetic and deeply intelligent opposition to social injustice, and his never-ending fight to build a better world.

CCPA-Mb, in recognition of his enormous contributions to the labour movement and to the struggle for social justice, is establishing the Errol Black Chair in Labour Issues. This will create a permanent position at CCPA-Mb for a first-class labour researcher, whose job will be to continue into the future the legacy left by Errol Black, by doing research and writing about the central role of organized labour in building a better world.

Consistent with the spirit of May Day and of Mayworks, you are invited to contribute financially to this important initiative. All financial contributions will be put to good use in an important, labour-friendly and labour-supported cause. To contribute please contact Karen: karen@policyalternatives.ca or (204) 927-3200.

Jim Silver is a member of the CCPA-Mb Board.

WORDS FROM THE BOOK OF, ECCLESIASTES FRENCH, GEORGE ABER ADAPTATION AND, PETE SEEGER

Words-adapted from The Bible, book of Ecclesiastes, Music-Pete Seeger

To Everything (Turn, Turn, Turn)
There is a season (Turn, Turn, Turn)
And a time to every purpose, under Heaven

A time to be born, a time to die
A time to plant, a time to reap
A time to kill, a time to heal
A time to laugh, a time to weep

To Everything (Turn, Turn, Turn)
There is a season (Turn, Turn, Turn)
And a time to every purpose, under Heaven

A time to build up, a time to break down
A time to dance, a time to mourn
A time to cast away stones, a time to gather stones together

To Everything (Turn, Turn, Turn)
There is a season (Turn, Turn, Turn)
And a time to every purpose, under Heaven

A time of love, a time of hate
A time of war, a time of peace
A time you may embrace, a time to refrain from embracing

To Everything (Turn, Turn, Turn)
There is a season (Turn, Turn, Turn)
And a time to every purpose, under Heaven

A time to gain, a time to lose
A time to rend, a time to sew
A time for love, a time for hate
A time for peace, I swear it's not too late
